WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A moist, unstable air mass will be over northern California for several more days. This will lead to daily thunderstorms across our mountain areas except in the west south of the Clear Lake area. There could be locally heavy rain and small hail with the thunderstorms, particularly today and Thursday. There may also be some light rain showers at times in the same areas, even at night, but rainfall from those showers will be very light. There will be an overall cooling trend into the weekend, but some of the inland valley areas in the northwest portion of the Geographic Area will continue to be very hot today. Otherwise, near to below normal afternoon temperatures are expected through the 7 day period. A change in weather pattern will develop over the weekend as a low pressure trough moves into place along the coast from the Bay Area north into the Pacific Northwest. Confidence is low as to how much cooling this trough could bring to the region, but afternoon highs 5-10 degrees below normal inland are possible. There will be a chance of light rain in the far northwest areas Sunday night into Tuesday. Drier warmer weather will likely return the middle of next week. Also expect a return of a reasonably healthy marine layer near the coast and possibly a bit inland over the weekend with late night and early morning fog and/or drizzle and persisting low cloudiness.

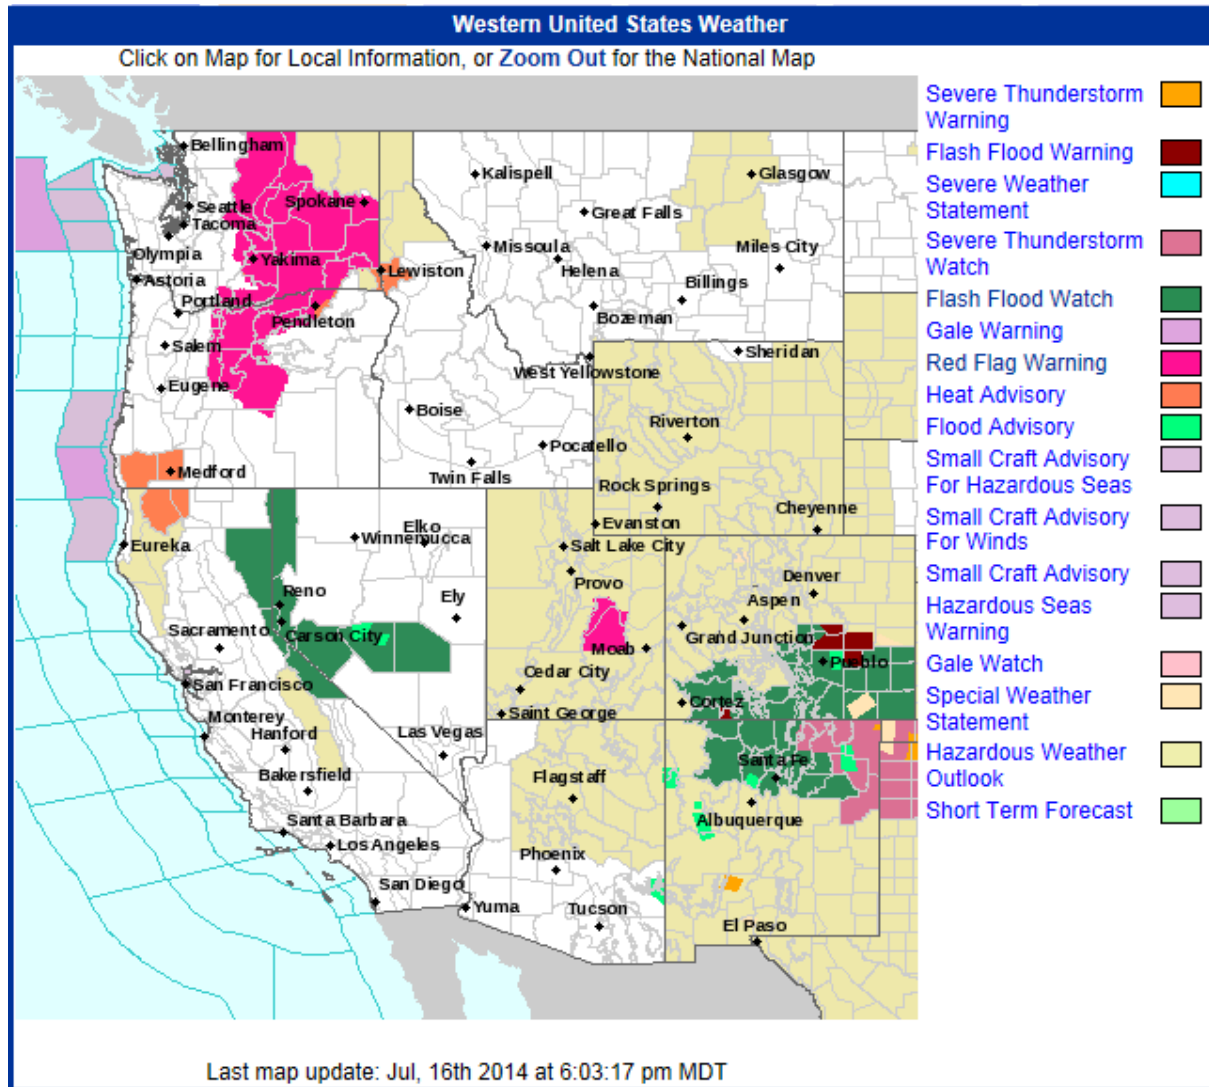

WEATHER

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Abundant subtropical moisture produced numerous wet thunderstorms in the Sierras yesterday. Over 1,000 lightning strikes occurred, mainly north of Fresno County, with over 1" of rain recorded near Mammoth Lakes. However, southwesterly flow aloft is beginning to steer this moisture away from the area and only scattered wet thunderstorms are expected each afternoon in the Sierras the rest of the week. Elsewhere, an unseasonably deep trough developing off the Pacific Northwest will encourage onshore flow to strengthen the rest of the week, leading to cooler weather and a revival of the marine layer. Widespread night through morning stratus will cover the coast, inland valleys and some lower coastal slopes up to 3,000 feet. The onshore flow will also lead to west-southwest winds of 15-25 mph with gusts to 40 mph in the Banning Pass, the Antelope Valley and the eastern slopes of the Cleveland National Forest this afternoon and again Thursday afternoon. High temperatures will be near normal through Friday with highs in the 70s along the coast and in the mountains to the upper 80s to lower 90s in the valleys. The San Joaquin Valley will top out in the mid to upper 90s while the low desert reaches 105 each day. This weekend, the storms in the Sierras should come to an end, but isolated storms may be possible across the far eastern deserts near the Arizona border. Temperatures will warm slightly and there will be less wind due to a weaker onshore flow. Next week, a burgeoning mass of high pressure over the Four Corners is expected to slowly expand westward, leading to much warmer weather. By next Wednesday, the valleys will likely be over 100 degrees with the low desert possibly seeing readings over 120. Monsoonal moisture will remain suppressed to our south and no thunderstorms are expected next week.

Situational Summary

On January 17, 2014 Governor Edmund G. Brown proclaimed a State of Emergency and directed state officials to take all necessary actions to prepare for drought conditions. The State Operation Center (SOC) is activated to implement objectives in support of the Governor's priorities. The lack of winter rain and snowfall has resulted in extremely dry conditions in many parts of the State. Reservoir levels are down significantly from where they should be on average for this time of year. If conditions continue severe impacts to municipal water supplies, agriculture (plants and livestock) and firefighting capabilities are likely in store for the State over the next few months. Negative economic impacts will also result.

The drought could result in severe impacts to the municipal water supplies, wells, agriculture (plants and livestock) and firefighting capabilities for several months. The SOC continues to be activated to monitor the situation statewide, and support regional and local operational areas.

On 7/8/14 the State Water Board will publicly release proposed water conservation requirements to reduce water waste across the state. These proposed emergency regulations include mandatory restrictions on water use, and will be considered by the Water Board on 7/15/14.

The Taskforce continues to meet regularly to take actions that conserve water and coordinate state response to the drought.

Cal OES continues to gather drought-related costs from state agencies and local governments.

Open Burn Ban in effect across the state: Open burning is now prohibited on 31 million acres of land across the state, due to a burn ban that CAL FIRE has directed each of its unit chiefs to implement. This ban on open burning in state responsibility areas (outside of cities and towns) reduces wildfire danger amidst extremely dry conditions.
